Sella Concept takes The Conran Shop to infinity

The Conran Shop's flagship Chelsea store celebrates design's past, present and future with major window installation

Ad Infinitum render by Sella Concept for The Conran Shop

For London Design Festival, The Conran Shop's Chelsea store celebrates the heritage and legacy of contemporary design with a monumental window installation created by design studio Sella Concept. Using reflection as a metaphor for temporal transition, the installation conveys The Conran Shop's passion for innovation alongside its ongoing celebration of design icons.

Sella Concept's founders, designers Tatjana von Stein and Gayle Noonan, are transforming the Chelsea window into a hall of mirrors, an infinitely reflective, stripped-back fantasy world of curved forms, sharp straight edges, floating walls and windows.

Influenced by the work of the legendary Mexican architect Luis Barragán – particularly his use of apertures and planes – Sella Concept are creating a space of hovering screens, colourful openings, spherical windows and abstract shapes that runs the length of the shopfront. Mirrors and aluminum strips positioned on the external walls create endless reflections of the products on display, from multiple angles, earning the installation its title: Ad Infinitum, meaning infinity in Latin.

The window is divided into four showcase spaces, each one distinctive in its design and colour palette and devoted to a single piece of furniture – making Ad Infinitum one of the most restrained window displays in The Conran Shop’s history. It gives visitors a chance to focus solely on one object at a time, exploring it from myriad angles and perspectives.

“Sella Concept have brought a fresh way of thinking, something different and unexpected into the store environment. This beautiful and immersive installation provides an opportunity to celebrate some of our most iconic pieces, but with a twist. We're really excited to see our customers' reaction."

- Stephen Briars, Creative Director, The Conran Shop

Selected from The Conran Shop's AW19 collection, the Conran-exclusive products featuring in the window will include:

- Latis dining chair by award-winning designer Samuel Wilkinson in a choice of three new Kvadrat/Raf Simons fabrics
- Limited-edition Saarinen table in fusion fire marble, by Eero Saarinen for Knoll
- Limited-edition Wishbone chair in walnut and oak, by Carl Hansen & Søn

Because the products are shown in isolation, beneath a 4m ceiling, seen through varied apertures and infinitely reflected in mirrors, they entice viewers to explore each piece from multiple angles, to ask questions and truly reflect on the design.

The works are even viewable from above, thanks to two huge pill-shaped windows between the shop floor and the installation. Walls, floors and columns of the display feature a dotted grid pattern, conveying a sense of continuity throughout the installation, and causing the viewer to question their position on the timeline: past, present or future?

"London Design Festival is terrain for new talent, forms, materials and processes, all rooted in past design influences. The Conran Shop has always had underlying respect for both past and present talent and craftsmanship, celebrating both classic masterpieces and contemporary designs. With Ad Infinitum we wanted to not only to recognise yesterday's design heroes, but also to acknowledge that today's design pieces will become tomorrow's classics."

- Tatjana von Stein, co-founder, Sella Concept

Ad Infinitum will be in place at The Conran Shop Chelsea, in Brompton Design District, for the duration of London Design Festival, 14-22 September 2019.
